

Master's Vitality and Ageing (MSc)

Leiden University's Master Vitality and Ageing is an unique 1- year internationally, interdisciplinary and intergenerational programme that focuses on the unprecedented grow of the ageing population.

The rapidly growing number of older adults brings challenges all of its own. These challenges, in turn, call for a new type of expert, one with up-to-date knowledge and the creativity and originality to innovate.

Thanks to continuing healthcare developments and improvements, it's not unreasonable to assume that in future we can expect to live even longer. Given the complexity of this field and its obvious relevance to us all, the Master's Vitality and Ageing will transform the grey challenge of an ageing population into a colourful career opportunity!
